HLB Receives AHLA Top Honors Recognition for Excellence in Health Law Leadership

News 06.04.25

HLB has been selected as a recipient of the American Health Law Association's (AHLA) Top Honors award, recognizing outstanding commitment to advancing the health law profession and supporting legal excellence in healthcare.

The Top Honors program celebrates organizations that demonstrate exceptional leadership in promoting health law education, fostering professional development, and strengthening connections within the legal healthcare community. Recipients are chosen based on their significant contributions to AHLA's mission and their dedication to elevating standards across the health law field.

This prestigious recognition places HLB among an elite group of organizations that have made substantial contributions to the health law community through mentorship, education, and professional advocacy. The award reflects the organization's ongoing efforts to support health law professionals in delivering superior legal services that ultimately benefit healthcare delivery and patient outcomes.

The AHLA Top Honors program underscores the critical role that leading organizations play in shaping the future of health law and supporting the next generation of health law professionals.

AHLA is the nation's premier nonpartisan educational organization focused on legal issues in healthcare. Serving more than 14,000 health law professionals nationwide, AHLA advances excellence in health law practice through comprehensive educational programs, professional development opportunities, and advocacy for the highest standards in healthcare legal services.

Through its diverse membership of attorneys, compliance professionals, healthcare executives, and consultants, AHLA works to improve healthcare outcomes while supporting legal professionals who navigate the complex intersection of law and healthcare.
