Last night (November 10), the Senate voted 60-40 on a measure to fund the government through January 30. The House of Representatives has been called back and could vote on the measure as early as Wednesday. The bill is likely to pass in the House despite some pushback. After final passage in the House, President Trump will quickly sign it into law and reopen the government later this week. The bill retroactively extends health care extensions through January 30 including telehealth waivers.
