

Study Suggests Wide Variation in Access to Primary Care Among Medicare Beneficiaries Living in Urban Locations

Health Equity

03.18.26

A recent study in Health Affairs Scholar found substantial variation in appointment availability and wait times for Medicare beneficiaries seeking primary care services across four U.S. urban areas surveyed. The findings underscore the need for continued evaluation of access to primary care for Medicare beneficiaries to ensure more consistency across the country's metropolitan areas.