

Top Ten Column: The Trump Administration's 2025 DEI Executive Order: Unveiling FCA Risks for Health Care Providers

Barri T. Dean

Feb 28, 2025 ⌚ 1 min read

Guido Mieth via Getty Images

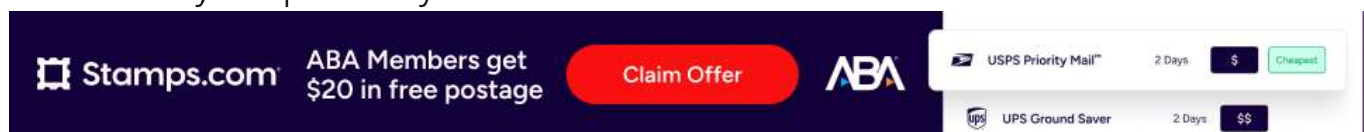

On January 21, 2025, the White House issued the Ending Illegal Discrimination and Restoring Merit-Based Opportunity Executive Order, directing federal agencies to eliminate “discriminatory and illegal” diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) programs. The order was directed not only at federal departments and agencies' DEI programs but also targeted federal contractors and grant recipients, requiring them to certify compliance with anti-discrimination laws and explicitly linking this compliance to the materiality standard under the False Claims Act (FCA). This connection potentially raises legal and compliance considerations for the healthcare industry.

The FCA is a civil fraud statute dating back to the Civil War era that imposes liability on anyone who (among other things) knowingly submits false claims to the federal government. A key link in FCA cases is materiality, meaning whether the alleged misrepresentation influenced the government’s decision to pay the claim. The executive order’s directive that compliance with anti-discrimination laws is “material” to government payments suggests an evolving enforcement approach under the FCA. This expansion raises the question of whether healthcare providers who maintain DEI programs could face FCA scrutiny if their programs are alleged to run afoul of federal anti-discrimination laws. Under Supreme Court precedent in Universal Health Services v. United States ex rel. Escobar, the standard for proving materiality is “demanding” and “rigorous,” essentially requiring that the misrepresentation is significant enough that the government would not have paid the claim had it known about the violation. However, by explicitly tying DEI compliance to materiality in federal contracts and grants, the executive order prompts the need for further legal analysis regarding, for example, whether a provider or payer’s activities include federal contracts or grants, thus bringing them squarely within the purview of the executive order’s mandate. The executive order sheds light on the future of FCA investigations, a topic historically debated.

Given these uncertainties, federal contractors and grantees should proactively evaluate their DEI programs in the context of existing anti-discrimination laws and stay alert to any shifts in enforcement priorities. While it remains to be seen how the executive order will impact the healthcare industry as a whole, its language indicates that the enforcement landscape for FCA claims may shift, particularly in sectors heavily reliant on federal contracts and grants.

Submitted by Hooper Lundy & Bookman.

An advertisement for Stamps.com. On the left, the Stamps.com logo is displayed next to the text "ABA Members get $20 in free postage". In the center is a prominent red button with the text "Claim Offer". To the right of the button is the ABA logo. Further right, there are two shipping options: "USPS Priority Mail™" with a "2 Days" delivery time, a "$" price indicator, and a "Cheapest" label; and "UPS Ground Saver" with a "2 Days" delivery time and a "$$" price indicator.

Published by the American Bar Association ©2025. Reproduced with permission. All rights reserved. This information or any portion thereof may not be copied or disseminated in any form or by any means or stored in an electronic database or retrieval system without the express written consent of the American Bar Association.

ABA American Bar Association |

https://www.americanbar.org/groups/health_law/news/2025/2/trump-administrations-2025-dei-executive-order/?login